Arthur Barlowe

Arthur Barlowe was the captain of one of two ships sent out in 1584 under a license granted to Sir Walter Raleigh by Queen Elizabeth "to discover, search, find out, and view such remote, heathen, and barbarous lands, countries, and territories, not actually possessed of any Christian prince, nor inhabited by Christian people...." Philip Amadas (or Amidas) was captain of the second ship. They left England on April 27, 1584, and set out across the Atlantic until they sighted the Canary Islands on May 10th. From there they sailed westward until they sighted the West Indies on June 10th and were off Florida on July 2nd.

The explorers sailed along the North American coast but they found no harbor until they reached North Carolina. Cape Hatteras attracted their attention and with some difficulty they brought the two vessels inside the sand bars and dropped anchor in Pamlico Sound. They landed to examine the territory and to take possession "for the Queenes most excellent Majestie." On their return Captain Barlowe wrote an account of the expedition so enthusiastic as to prompt Queen Elizabeth to confer knighthood on Walter Raleigh and name the vast western lands Virginia.

Arthur Barlowe's account of the exploration was first published in Richard Hakluyt's Divers Voyages touching the Discoverie of America, 1582, and more recently in "The First Voyage to Roanoke," Old South Leaflets, General Series, Vol. 4, No. 92, Boston, 1898; "Barlow's description of the North Carolina Coast" in The Ocean Highway: New Brunswick, New Jersey to Jacksonville, Florida, a Federal Writers' Project, 1938; and Increase Niles Tarbox, Sir Walter Raleigh and his Colony in America, 1884.

Barlowe's report has been called "one of the clearest contemporary pictures of the contact of Europeans with North American Indians." In his narrative, Barlowe describes the four-month expedition (April 27th to mid-September, 1584) in glowing terms. The savages are "most gentle, loving and faithfull, void of all guile, and treason, and such as lived after the manner of the golden age." A detailed picture of their generous hospitality is given, as well as the manner of making boats, warfare among the tribes, and the type of food grown and its preparation. The soil was the "most plentiful, sweete, fruitfull, and wholsome of all the world," and English peas planted by the voyagers grew fourteen inches in ten days. There are omissions in Barlowe's report, however, and it is thought that the omitted material was suppressed deliberately, for propaganda purposes.

Nothing is known of Barlowe personally except that, like Philip Amadas, he was part of Raleigh's household in his early years. On the Virginia expedition he was second captain to Amadas and accompanied him on the visit to Chief Wingina's village on Roanoke Island. On the return to England in September, they took with them two Indians, Manteo and Wanchese, who were taught English and served as propaganda agents for a second voyage.

There is no certain evidence that Barlowe returned to Virginia on the 1585 expedition, although Amadas did. His name is listed only in the Holinshed account of the 1585 expedition, and that reference cannot be trusted. He is not listed in the Tiger journal, and, although it is possible that Barlowe kept the journal himself and forgot to include his own name, the report is not written in his style. Like his friend Amadas, Barlowe dropped out of sight after his return to England.

Our 10th Anniversary

This issue marks the tenth anniversary of this newsletter. It was on September 1, 1988, that A. Maxim Coppage published Issue No. 1. Over the years the layout and format have changed, but the original purpose remains the same - "to help bring our resources together and pool information about our Barlow families."

But It's A Sad Anniversary

But on the eve of our anniversary, we have learned of the death of "Max" Coppage. He died earlier this year at the age of 82 after a brief illness.

Max was especially proud of the fact that he was a "double Barlow", that is, his ancestor Eliphalet Barlow married a cousin, Mildred Barlow. And, according to a note from his son, Max had said that although the newsletter was never as big as some of his other endeavors, for some reason it was the one he enjoyed the most.

For those who knew him, Max Coppage will be missed. But his legacy, this Barlow of Barlow newsletter continues on.

Joel Barlow Memorial

On June 28, 1998, a new memorial monument was dedicated to Joel Barlow, one of our earliest American diplomats, in the churchyard at Zarnowiec, Poland, where he died and was buried in 1812. The monument, fashioned by Stefan Dousa, a sculptor from Krakow, is a rough-hewn piece of pink limestone, just under six feet high, with two bronze plaques, one in English and one in Polish, embedded in it. It has been erected in a small salient in the churchyard wall made expressly for the purpose - the exact location of Barlow's grave in the cemetery is not known. The event was organized and the tablet donated by The Joel Barlow Memorial Fund, in cooperation with the American Center for Polish Culture and the Diplomatic and Consular Officers Retired (DACOR) of the U.S. State Department.

The dedication, which coincided with the celebration of Zarnowiec's 900th anniversary, was a grand affair. A large crowd of regional dignitaries, two bishops, two brass bands, a youth chorus and a large group of girls waiting to be confirmed, were present. The bishop of Kielce, Marian Florczyk, celebrated a solemn mass, and speeches honoring Barlow were made by a variety of persons, including the bishop, the parish priest, Father Mieczyslaw Kowal, the mayor, our consul general from Krakow, Francis Scanlan, and Richard Parker, a former diplomat to Poland and the organizer of the whole affair.

The inscription on the monument reads as follows:

JOEL BARLOW
1754-1812

American diplomate, Revolutionary War chaplain, poet, businessman and friend of Jefferson and Kosciuszko, Joel Barlow, born in Redding, Connecticut, and a graduate of Yale University, is buried somewhere in this churchyard. The exact location is unknown.

As minister to France, Barlow was returning from an unsuccessful attempt to meet Napoleon in Lithuania.
Traveling in severe winter conditions, he died of pneumonia in Zarnowiec on December 26, 1812. The marble plaque inside the church commemorating his death was placed there by a Polish soldier, Adam Jakub Piwowski, whom Barlow found by the roadside and took into his coach, saving his life.

Donated by the Joel Barlow Memorial Fund in cooperation with the American Center of Polish Culture and DACOR (Diplomatic and Consular Officers Retired)

The marble plaque inside the church has a Latin inscription which says simply that Barlow, the American minister to France and Italy, who was traveling, died there on December 26, 1812. Several years ago an American diplomatic consultant, William Simmons, and his wife, had the plaque cleaned and restored, and had a ceramic portrait of Barlow embedded in the wall above it.
