Vermont Vital Records

Traditionally, the recording of births, marriages and deaths in Vermont has been the province of the town and city clerks, and that is where the original records are kept. Such records have been required since 1840, although many towns kept records on their own from their founding, sometimes as part of the town meeting minutes or the town land records.

In 1919, the state required all town clerks to make copies of their vital records on cards and send them to Montpelier, the state capital. The accuracy and completeness of these central records depended, of course, on the individual town clerk, as well as the accuracy and completeness of the original town records. It has been reported that in some cases the original records had been lost or destroyed and the card file in Montpelier is the only existent record. It has also been reported that there are differences between the cards that were sent to Montpelier and the original records - in other words, transcription errors by the town clerks who copied their records onto the cards.

However, experience has shown that the transcribed records are quite accurate and it can be estimated that the cards are probably 99% correct. The Barlow records in the town clerks offices at Barnard, Benson and Hubbardton have been diligently searched for errors and omissions, and disappointedly none have been found.

Until recently the card file has been open to the public. Now the cards have been microfilmed and only this version is available to the public — the original cards are no longer used. Additionally, the films have been moved to a public records facility at Middlesex, Vermont, a small town seven miles west of Montpelier. The vital record films are divided chronologically into several groups, the records up to 1870 are in one group, the records from 1871 to 1908 are in another group, and the more recent records are in their own groups.

The Middlesex public records facility has records of births, deaths, marriages and divorces that are older than 10 years, and land records and probate indexes through 1970. The facility is located on US Route 2 behind the State Police

A Note From The Editor

Again, I would like to invite everyone to submit material for publication in this newsletter. The problem is not that I'm running out of material to publish — the problem is that all my material is about the New England and New York Barlow lines that are my primary personal interest. I would like to keep the newsletter balanced and have it cover all Barlow lines. To do that, I need help from the researchers who are working on the other Barlow lines.
